To the Gigantic Playground Hiring Team,

I'm glad to recommend Jeffery Ferguson — "Phoenix." Jeffery has been my technical arm across several of my businesses — Casa Medici Designs, the Persian Palace Gallery, and my security company, SageCraft — helping with websites, technical security, and getting the corporate side of things organized in a way that actually holds together.

Concretely, he's drafted and organized outreach correspondence on behalf of the gallery to serious contacts — the kind of writing that has to read as credible to people who get pitched constantly. He's also been hands-on with the technical infrastructure side of my work, including physical security equipment we've used together in the field. We've talked seriously about him becoming a more formal part of SageCraft going forward, which should tell you how much I trust his judgment on both the technical and the security side.

What I'd want a hiring team to know is that Jeffery treats security and technology as something that protects real people, not just a line item — that mindset matters more to me than a certification does. I recommend him without reservation.
