To whoever is reviewing this —

Glad to recommend Jeffery Ferguson — "Phoenix." He's been my technical arm across several of my businesses — Casa Medici Designs, the Persian Palace Gallery, and my security company, SageCraft — helping with websites, technical security, and getting the corporate side of things organized in a way that actually holds together.

Concretely, he's drafted and organized outreach correspondence for the gallery to serious contacts — writing that has to read as credible to people who get pitched constantly. He's also been hands-on with technical infrastructure, including physical security equipment we've used together in the field. We've talked seriously about him becoming a more formal part of SageCraft going forward, which should tell you how much I trust his judgment, technical and otherwise.

What I'd want a hiring team to know: Jeffery treats security and technology as something that protects real people, not just a line item — that mindset matters more to me than a certification does. Recommended without reservation.
